Can we predict which undergraduate students will be at-risk for failing out of the University of Bridgeport in their first year? Yes, we can. The research tells us which predictive factors actually forecast students’ academic success and/or failure. Join us for a discussion about whether we SHOULD identify and provide support services before students begin to fail their coursework. Add your ideas, comments and evaluation to the “new proposal” for proactive intervention for at-risk incoming freshman.

Meet the Presenter:

Dr. Ellen Flynn has over thirty years of experience working with urban college students. She is an Assistant Professor in the School of Education and also a Counseling Psychologist. She brings her knowledge of counseling techniques to her academic support work with at-risk college students.

RSVP by April 8th to celt@bridgeport.edu.
A light lunch will be served.
